The British Film Commission (BFC) is the UK Government's strategic body for feature film inward investment responsible for:

- Encouraging and supporting international feature film production in the UK
- Supporting the UK film infrastructure
- Working with UK Government to ensure film friendly policies

The BFC welcomes the European Commission's initiative to update the Cinema Communication.

Both the British Government and the British Film Institute, in its role as the Government's lead agency for film in the UK, have responded to the issues paper on assessing State aid for films and other audiovisual works.

The BFC wholly supports and endorses the submissions of both the British Government and the BFI.
